

Ben, aged 12, has been given a boomerang and sets out with his father and grandfather to try it out in the local park. Unfortunately, the boomerang becomes lodged in the branches of a very high tree.

No amount of stone throwing by Ben's father, Bob, can dislodge the boomerang from the tree.

The image of the boomerang lost in the tree's branches becomes central to the lives of all three.

For all three are struggling separately with feelings of loss: Of a boomerang, of a job, of a wife and mother and of life itself.

Their emotions and knowledge are concealed from each other for reasons of pride, cowardliness and love'.

Reviews

'The Boomerang is a simple, beautifully written play.

A must for future One Act Play Drama Festivals.

Poignant, sad, and at times very funny, the play's three characters, from three different generations, will linger with you long after the final curtain'. Catherine Itzen. Theatre Critic

'A considerable achievement.

The concealment of emotions and knowledge is expertly handled by a very fine writer.' Selby Carter. Artistic Director.
