

Be different: buy direct from the author or tslbooks.uk

Pause.

The three of us have been spending some time together. However, Mike does like to have his own space. And I'm not one of these women that demands that every minute of the day is spent together. He liked to go out on his own particularly on an evening. He said he just likes to go for a walk and clear his head, relax basically. Well why not? He works hard Monday to Friday. He deserves to 'chill out' whilst on holiday. He gives me some money and tells me to take Kim somewhere. There's always things for children to do. Lots of games' areas in the hotel, swimming pool ...

Pause.

When me and Kim were out walking one time we did see Mike talking to some local men. They all seemed to be getting on laughing and joking. Mike speaks fluent Spanish, and other languages, French and German actually. That's something else about him that is so appealing, he is very well travelled. His passport is amazing. It puts mine to shame. He's been all over the world. I had one trip abroad with Geoff, because of his fear of flying. I managed to talk him into a trip to Paris. He insisted on going by Eurostar. It was hardly the holiday of a lifetime really. I'd been to France many times before. And he made no attempt to learn the lingo. He would just pop into a shop and point at what he wanted and speak English very slowly. It was rather embarrassing.

Pause.

The way Mike was conversing with these men, it was something to admire. I could tell they were locals because of the way they were dressed. Let's just say they weren't wearing Hawaii shirts. Mike seemed to be enjoying himself and I didn't want to interrupt him, whilst he was in full swing. They all seemed a lot younger than him and they seemed very interested in what he was saying. He has a way with words. He was probably selling