

Urgent! Pocket Money

Required

BEATRICE HOLLOWAY

Be different: buy direct from the author or tslbooks.uk

CHAPTER ONE

A Money Predicament

It was two months after Rhys and Giddy joined the school rugby sessions that Tony Gibbs, the coach, announced he was arranging a trip for the boys to see a match in London, 'Next February,' he said. He paused for a moment, looked at a sheet of paper in his hand and went on, 'Some of the costs will be met by the council and school, but if any of you would like to go, you will have to find around seven pounds each.'

All of the boys nudged each other declaring their intention to go to London.

'I suggest you speak to your parents and start saving now, as the money will have to be paid up six weeks before we go. The tickets, unfortunately, are very expensive,' Tony warned.

Rhys and Giddy both knew they had a problem; how to get money to pay for the trip? Both boys knew there was no spare cash at home, not ever. At the end of the spring term, they had gone on a five day school trip to Porthcawl. The local education authority had paid for everything except their pocket money.

Rhys and Giddy looked at each other; there was no need to say anything, of course they would go. Rugby was their main interest at the moment.