

An illustrated history of
The Protestant Dissenting
Church
Potterspurpy & Yardley Gobion
Northamptonshire, 1690-1920

Jack Clamp

This Illustrated History of the Protestant Dissenting Church at Potterspurpy and Yardley Gobion covers the period from the church's beginning in 1690 to the early part of the twentieth century. It was written in the hope that the important part the Independent Church played for many years in the life of the two villages would be preserved for and appreciated by future generations. Many members of the new church had before this time been meeting in illegal conventicles since 1669 while some had been connected with the Anabaptists at Stony Stratford. From 1687 nonconformist meetings could be held providing the place had been registered. In 1691 the first pastor was Michael Harrison from Caversfield to be followed by many more over the years. This book contains a succession these ministers together with their history. The main body of work records the part they played in the life of the church and the legacy they left in the villages together with a list of notable dates.

About the author

Jack Clamp was born in New Bradwell, Bucks in 1928. After a period as an instrument maker and service in the Royal Signals as a radio mechanic, he became a teacher in 1959 at what is now known as the Radcliffe School, Wolverton. Whilst there he obtained a Diploma in Education from London University and in 1971 was appointed Deputy Headteacher at the County Primary School, Potterspurpy, Northamptonshire. He became Headteacher in 1974 and remained there until his retirement in 1988.
