

William Parker, fifteen years old, is surrounded by those who would do him harm - and not just the section of the colony wearing red coats. But it's when an attempted escape ends in failure that his problems really begin. Surrounded by thieves, murderers, and enemies of the state, a young boy from Hertfordshire must overcome the odds to survive the harsh realities of Britain's fledgling colony. This is the sequel to "Adam's Lock".

About the author

Mike Lansdown is a PGCE tutor and MA in education supervisor with the University of Buckingham's education department, a position he has held since retiring from his second headship in 2015. Prior to completing 18 years as a headteacher, he worked in London teaching in both the primary and secondary sectors. Before this, he taught English as a foreign language (EFL) in London and in Sweden, but started life as a teacher of geography, geology and PE.

The Land Beyond the Seas is his second novel, the first being Adam's Lock.
