

"In this collection we are at times faced with an honest and brutal critique of the world in which we find ourselves. Sweeping panoramic verses hover over the social, political and environmental issues that blight the planet. But lest we be quick to judge, Nick is not afraid to make the reader uncomfortable with the truth of our own complicity." Alan Mann - Writer and Author

About the author

Nick Horgan lives in outer suburban north-west London with his wife, and has a full-time job in administration. An enthusiastic reader who didn't enjoy creative writing at school, he answered an advert in 2010 for new local writing group, and is now co-leader of Pinner Writers Group, and one of the original members. Since joining the group he has developed his writing and performs regularly at Speak Your Mind at West House and other events, and exhibited at the Easter Joy and Justice exhibition in 2017. This is his first collection of poetry and short stories.
