Chapter 1

George was born in the summer of 2011, along with his sister Flora, into a large family of Oxfordshire Birmans. At the tender age of three months he was removed, along with his sister, to live with new parents, a respectable couple living in Middlesex on the edge of the large capital city of London. Even at an early age, George was a handsome boy cat, with the fine brown markings of a classic chocolate Birman and beautiful blue eyes. He had a thick white coat, of which he was very proud, and an array of finely positioned whiskers. He was admired at the local vets not only for his handsome face, but also for his charm, even when he had to have a serious operation which was necessary in the life of a young boy cat. George, too, took pleasure in listening to classical music, enjoying Monteverdi and the Baroque.

George's sister Flora had a more delicate beauty than George, and from an early age was aware that she could be decorative. She did not enjoy music as much as George, who appreciated his mother's singing and shared her tastes in classical music. Flora was absent
